Q:How about an elephant-sized radish?
(I caught it myself!!) --An Ultra-Canadian Man

A:Hmm, looks delicious. Thank you. Krunch krunch munch munch... Oh!! Huh? Oh! Krunch krunch munch munch...

Q:Hello, Mr. Oda, how are you? Listen, I was assigned to write about my aspirations, so I asked my teacher if my topic could be that my second wish is to become a pirate, and my teacher said, "Get serious!"
I am serious! --Saori

A:Of course you're serious. Who'd joke about a thing like that? You ask that teacher of yours, "What's wrong with being a plunderer!?" Okay?

Q:I was watching the One Piece anime the other day, (the adaptation of volume 7, chapter 57: "If You Have a Dream," where Zeff loses his leg). It said that Zeff lost his leg in a shipwreck. Was that changed for the sake of the little kids who watch the show?

A:Exactly. An episode titled "Eat Your Own Leg" might be too much for small children. Television audiences can number in the millions, and special precautions have to be taken. Kudos to the animators who create such wonderful works while being careful about things like that. If you want to show them your appreciation, send them a letter. It will cheer them up.
